

COMPASS YEAR

FIND YOUR MAJOR AND GRADUATE ON TIME

At Mount Mary University, we help women discover the major that inspires their creativity and connects them to promising careers. In fact, we're the first university to offer a comprehensive, one-year program specifically designed to help undecided students find their major and stay on track to graduate on time. We call it the Compass Year.

During your Compass Year, your career exploration process will be embedded in the deeper context of purpose, mission and vocation. You'll be guided through a process of thoughtful self-exploration, while feeling supported by a surrounding community of classmates, faculty, career counselors and mentors.

Mount Mary's Compass Year program is built on evidence-based career and vocational practices to give students the opportunity to discover their path, and the resources and support they need to stay in school. Through this program you'll experience:

- Classes in your first year introducing you to possible career options. You'll identify a basic subject area of interest, called a "Meta Major," and take core classes in your first year that will count toward your degree.
- Guided self-assessment resources that will help you identify your interests and strengths.
- Cohort-based learning that provides support and structure throughout your discovery process.
- Courses that allow you hands-on experiences in different careers, plus a chance to learn from experts in the field.
- Purpose-driven leadership learning through a core curriculum that includes classes such as Leadership for Social Justice and Search for Meaning.
