WHY DO YOU NEED A RESUME?

A resume is a one-two page document which allows you to introduce yourself and your strengths to potential employers and graduate school recruiters, scholarship committees; individuals you'd like to have in your "network"; and many others that you meet as you make career and academic plans.

FORMATS FOR WRITING A RESUME

There are many different ways to write/design your resume. The way a resume is organized will vary for each person and each position.

There are three basic formats for writing a resume:

- Chronological: This is a good design for someone with a lot of related work experience. This format lists past employment in reverse chronological order, with the most recent first.
- Functional: Experience is summarized in skill categories rather than by chronological order. This format works well for someone with little or no work experience and is especially beneficial if one is trying to avoid the use of dates or non-consistent employment. This design allows the individual to be more selective about her employment or feature an internship.
- Combination: The combination or position-oriented format combines skills and work history. It presents patterns of accomplishments and skills in categorical sections or a single section called "Areas of Accomplishment." When including brief job descriptions, stress connections between those jobs and the one for which you are applying.

To choose the most appropriate format remember that you want to customize your resume for the position for which you are applying. Sections of your resume that are most important for the position should be listed near the top of your resume.

While you may choose any of the above formats to create your resume, you will want to make sure you include the following sections that are typically standard in all resumes.

RESUME SECTIONS

Contact Information

The first item that should appear on your resume is your name. Your contact information should immediately follow. (As noted in the "Resume Design" section of this guide, having a personal letterhead comprised of your name and contact information will make your resume more eye appealing.)

Information to include in contact section:

- List your name, address, city, state, zip code, area code and telephone number of where you can be reached.
- Include your e-mail address if you check it regularly.
- You may consider listing your permanent and school address if you are submitting your resume for positions for summer term or between breaks.
- International students who wish to include citizenship/work status should include that desire in the contact section as well, although including such information is not required.
- If you are submitting a resume for a position outside of your home country, talk to the Registrar at Mount Mary about your work status and whether or not listing visa information on your resume is recommended in your personal circumstances.

Career Objective

The career objective gives a sense of purpose to the resume. State the type of position you want to attain and an indication of the skills you offer the employer. You do not necessarily have to identify a specific job title in your objective statement. Avoid generalities like “challenging position with opportunity for growth and advancement.” You should tailor your objective to each position you seek. The objective should be the first section after your name and contact information.

Education

In general, new grads should place education at the top of their resume (immediately after the objective, if one is used) as the primary qualifying factor for the position. List highest degree first and work backward. It is not necessary to list your high school education.

Information to include in education section:

- your degree and major/minor
- name of school attended, city and state of institution
- dates of graduation
- your GPA, if above a 3.0
- you may include your major GPA, if it is higher than your cumulative GPA

Relevant Coursework

If you don't have career-related experience, it is a good idea to list some of your major courses or projects on your resume. This gives the employer an idea of your training and shows that you have knowledge in your specific area. Avoid listing courses by their catalogue number; instead list them by title, in order of importance.

Experience

This section is used to highlight your employment history. Be sure to show what you have achieved and special contributions you have made. Remember to include internships, field terms, clinical rotations, senior projects and practicum. This includes both paid and unpaid experience.

Information to include in experience section:

- your job title
- dates of work (years only or months and years only are sufficient)
- employer name and location (city and state only)

Ways to describe your experience:

- define abilities rather than your duties
- stress your accomplishments
- use brief and direct descriptions
- use strong action verbs
- avoid being overly complex

EXPERIENCE

Fort Atkinson Memorial Health Services

August 2011- December 2011

Fort Atkinson, Wisconsin

- Planned and directed site in conjunction with manager and developed new services.
- Supervised staff of 12 coordinated training, provided evaluation.
- Developed work schedules that assured adequate staff coverage.

Special Skills, Campus Involvement and Awards

Include any special skills such as computer skills and languages known. It is recommended to quantify your language skills by using phrases such as: proficient in, knowledge of, etc. Include your memberships in professional organizations and particularly any awards, leadership roles, offices held or presentations given that relate back to your career objective. To best highlight these experiences, you may separate them into their own sections. Some sample headings for these sections include: "Computer Skills", "Lab Skills", "Languages", "Honors and Achievements", "Military Service", "Special Skills", "Leadership Experience", "Extracurricular Activities", "International Experience", etc.

Community Contributions

Include community activities that relate to your objective and how you have added value to the organization. Possible headings for this section include "Community Service", "Community Involvement", "Community Contributions", "Volunteer Work", etc. (Note: All or some of your community contributions may be included as part of your "Experience" section or listed under their own separate section.)

RESUME DESIGN

Employers won't read your resume until you get past the screening stage. In order to make it that far, something must catch the employer's eye.

How to get noticed

Customizing your resume to a particular position, company or industry is a great way to bring positive attention to your resume.

- Include selling points that will substantiate your objective.

- Use key terms or phrases common to your target industry.
- Highlight information that is most relevant to your target career.
- Read the want ads in newspapers and trade/industry journals, or job descriptions in various career books, and pick out the key experiences and skills employers are seeking for jobs similar to the one you want.

Then incorporate relevant words and phrases into your resume presentation. By using key industry terms and highlighting information most relevant to your target job or career, you accomplish two goals: you show the employer you are familiar with the industry and you help eliminate doubts about how your qualifications meet their needs.

Making your resume an “easy read”

Your overall resume presentation says volumes about you. In addition to the content of your resume, it is important for you to consider layout and design. Many employers will initially look at resumes for only 10-20 seconds. Make those seconds count by creating a resume that is visually appealing and easy to read.

Eye Appeal

- Use plenty of “white” space and utilize formatting tools to help distinguish important information (e.g. section headings, school and company names, job titles, major, etc.).
- Do not exceed two tools (bold, underline, italic, etc.) per item.
- If your resume extends to a second page, try to fill at least half of that page. If you do not have enough information to do so, try to fit it all on one page.
- Limit the number of tabs you set so that all indentations and columns fall on no more than three vertical lines running down the page; too many tabs can make information appear scattered and thus more difficult to read.
- Create your own personal letterhead, which includes your name and contact information. Letterhead is a professional standard in business correspondence and may help your resume and cover letter stand out in a positive way. Your letterhead design can also show some of your own personality. Be sure your letterhead is still easy to read and error-free.
- Use resume or business stationery quality paper; conservatively light colored cotton bond paper.
- Print your resumes on a laser printer for the best quality, avoiding possible ink smears.

Attention to Detail

- Be consistent with your use of tools, placement and spacing. For example, if your job titles are in bold, make certain all of them appear that way and make sure all of your dates appear in the same locations.

Margins

- Your top and bottom margins should be at least 0.5 inch, but no greater than 1.0 inch. Left and right margins should be at least 0.75 inch, but no greater than 1.0 inch. Center your resume from top to bottom and left to right.

Font

- Use a 10-12 point font in the body of the resume, and 12-16 point font for section headings
- Use a 12-20 point font for your letterhead (name and contact information at the top of the resume). Have your name stand out, but avoid choosing a font size that is more than 2 sizes larger than your letterhead font.
- Use fonts that are easier to read, such as Garamond, Book Antiqua, Times New Roman, Arial, and Helvetica. Avoid fonts with unusual spacing between letters, shadowing or unusual letter shaping, such as ALGERIAN, Bernard MT, and Brush Script.

Resume building guides / templates

Remember writing and resume is an art not a science. There are many different ways you may choose to create your resume! When selecting a format for your resume choose one that highlights your information in the most clear and concise way, keeping in mind the overall aesthetic of your piece.

They are several examples of differing resume formats in the back of this guide. However, there are several templates/resume builders that are also available if you prefer to input your data into a pre-designed format. Check out the following resources for free resume templates!

- Microsoft Word – Open a new document and select from dozens of resume templates.
- E-resumes – An electronic resume builder, www.eresumes.com
- WISCareers – “Resume Maker.” Log into the Mount Mary’s WISCareers account, select the “Job Seeking” tab and create your own online portfolio! For login information contact the office of Advising and Career Development

MAKING SURE YOUR RESUME IS ERROR FREE

Review, Review, Review! It’s always a good idea to have someone else look over your resume. After you spend hours working on something, you may not catch spelling errors or questionable grammar, so let Career Development Staff, faculty, and/or friends double-check your work. Don’t place complete trust in computer spell-checks. Misspellings are found in 9 out of 10 resumes!

Also continue to edit your resume and customize it for particular positions. After each edit or revision, have at least two other individuals read your resume again to look for grammar, spelling, spacing or design errors.

Editing your resume to fit

When you need more space to fit things on one page:

- Reduce margins (no less than .5 inch margins).
- Reduce font sizes (no less than a 10 point font—try to keep your name and section headings at least 12 or 14 point font).
- Change font styles (Times Roman or Arial Narrow are fonts that take up smaller space per character).
- Change tabs so the tabbed line starts further left (can be less than 5 spaces over—go to a 3 or 4 space tab).
- Put more information on each line (e.g. 1. combine company name, job title, locations and dates on same line or split into two lines and then use bolds and/or italics to distinguish job title and company name to have them still stand out; 2. list related courses on one line; 3. list honors on one line; etc.). Try to avoid putting job descriptions in paragraphs or putting all club involvement on one line (too difficult to read or make distinguishable).
- Decrease the number of line spaces between headings (use only one blank line space instead of two between each section of the resume—do not take out all blank line spaces; spacing is still important to make the resume appealing to the eye and easier to read).
- Change date or state format so they’re shorter (e.g. use “02/05” vs. “February 2005”; use “WI” vs. “Wisconsin”, etc.).
- Eliminate too detailed information.
- Eliminate experiences that are least related or that involved the least amount of responsibility—only if there is other work experience to list that is more related, shows more responsibility, and/or is more recent.

- Redesign your personal letterhead so it takes up less space—put more information per line so fewer line spaces are used (e.g. list address, city/state/zip, phone number and email all on one line and then use bullet symbols to separate them so they're still easy to read).

When you need more content to fill a page:

- Expand margins (no larger than 1 inch left and right/top and bottom).
- Increase font sizes (no larger than 12 point for body of resume; no more than 16 point font for headings; no larger than 20 point font for name/letterhead).
- Change font (Arial or Helvetica are examples of fonts that take up more space per character).
- Increase tab spacing (e.g. make tab spacing 6 to 8 spaces apart vs. 5 or fewer spaces).
- Put less information per line (e.g. list job title separate from company name, list degree separate from school name, etc.).
- Increase line spacing between headings and items within a section (no more than two blank line spaces between each section; no more than one blank line space between separate items under a heading/within the - same section; two to three line spaces between your letterhead and the first section heading of the resume)
- Change date and state formats to be longer (e.g. "February 2003-March 2004" vs. "02/03-03/04"; use "Wisconsin" vs. "WI").
- List different items on separate lines (e.g. list company name on a separate line over job title).
- Check for missing sections (i.e. volunteer work, other unpaid work—including work for family members, foreign languages, travel abroad/international experience, etc.).
- Review descriptions for job duties and activity involvement—elaborate on the skills and accomplishments gained in your experiences, as needed.
- Redesign letterhead to use up more space—put each item of contact information on a separate.

ADDITIONAL RESUME GUIDELINES

General Considerations

- A resume is primarily a sales tool; it's an advertisement for you.
- Be prepared to discuss everything you place on your resume.
- Don't try to copy a resume; your experiences and education are unique.
- There is no one correct format; tailor yours to highlight your achievements.
- Resumes don't get you the job; they are meant to get you the interview.

Do Include

- An objective tailored to the industry or position
- Your education—state the degree you've earned or are pursuing and all majors and minors
- Your overall and/or major GPA if 3.0 or above (written as 3.0/4.0)
- An associate degree, if it adds something to your higher degree(s)
- The fact that you were financially responsible for your education
- Relevant coursework if you have limited experience in your field
- Your job-related accomplishments; not simply job descriptions
- Field experiences and internships
- Action words to describe your accomplishments (See Action Words on pp. 8-9 in this guide.)
- Activities, honors, awards and scholarships
- A skills summary; especially if you are changing career fields

Do Not Include

- Your social security number or other personal information
- Your high school education or achievements

- Street addresses, zip codes, or phone numbers other than your own
- Exhaustive detail; a resume is for highlighting information
- Technical jargon unrelated to the field for which you're submitting your resume
- Abbreviations, particularly those unique to a particular organization
- Your references; have a separate reference page
- Personal pronouns such as I, my, mine, we, us, they
- Use of the words "Responsibilities", "Duties" or "Responsibilities Included"; use active language and action verbs to describe experiences

Preparation Techniques

- When listing accomplishments, list them in order of most important to least important
- Boldly display your name at the top of your resume; include relevant addresses and phone numbers
- Do not put the word "resume" anywhere on your resume
- Your education/experience entries should be in reverse chronological order (most recent first)
- In your work experience section, use present tense verbs for jobs you currently hold and past tense ones for previous jobs
- As a new graduate, education should go toward the top of the resume (after two years of professional work experience, education should be moved toward the bottom of the resume)
- If you did not have a formal job title, construct one you feel your supervisor would approve (consult with your supervisor if possible)
- Tailor headings to your particular experiences; you can be creative!
- List internships, field terms, or volunteer work under a separate heading for greater emphasis
- When employment spans years, do not indicate months (e.g., 2003-2005)
- Use various type styles and formatting tools to emphasize items, but never make the page look too "busy"
- Use bullets; stay away from paragraphs and full sentences whenever possible
- Keep your resume concise; one page is the general norm; never exceed two
- If your resume is two pages long, be sure your name appears at the top of both pages and use a paper clip to attach them (do not staple—makes it more difficult for the employer to detach the paper for photocopying)

HOW TO INCLUDE REFERENCES

Never list references on the resume. DO NOT add the line "references available upon request", as this is assumed and unnecessary to state – use your resume space more effectively by filling it with more important information which highlights your strengths and qualifications. If requested, include a listing of your references on a separate page, which matches your resume in terms of paper, font, layout, letterhead, etc.

If an employer does not specifically request a list of references, you have two options:

- 1) Send a reference list anyway to bring to their attention particularly notable individuals on your reference list (this is common in the sciences and academia in general – the department may 'expect' you to send a list of references even if the job ad doesn't specify to do so); sometimes institutions use the reference list as a part of the initial screening process or to contact your current professors/supervisors to get more information about your background before inviting you to the next step in selection); or
- 2) Wait until the interviewing stage and bring your list of reference to the interview to show confidence in your abilities and references. This approach gives you two key advantages. First, it gives you greater control over when the employer contacts your references, allowing you time to contact them in advance to give more detail about the position for which you are applying if needed. Second, it prevents the employer from screening you out of the hiring process early if you would prefer them not to contact references early.

Most employers outside academia will indicate in the job ad if they would like a list of references or reference letters. Still, depending on your individual background and preferences, you may opt to send the reference list/letters even if the job ad doesn't specify – use your judgment and determine whether or not the reference list is likely to improve your chances of being considered in the next step in the selection process.

Things to provide someone serving as a reference for you:

- Information about positions for which you are applying
- If a reference letter or form is required from your references – provide the requirements information/forms to the reference
- Copy of your unofficial transcripts
- Copy of your resume
- If the reference is a faculty member - copies of papers graded by the faculty member, and a list of your current classes
- Possible talking points for them to write about in a recommendation letter, if applicable
- If a reference letter/form is required – a stamped addressed envelope
- If a reference letter/form is required – a stamped self-addressed postcard that reads “The (company/organization name) has received your reference form from (reference name) on this date of (leave this blank for date).” Ask your reference to include this card with the reference letter/form. The employer may mail this to you when they receive the reference letter/form.

Additional Tips

- When asking for references, ask the individuals if they can provide a “strong” reference. If you do not get their assurance that they are comfortable providing you with a favorable recommendation, then do not use them as a reference. They may say something in a phone reference or write you a letter of reference that reflects poorly on you.
- When asking for a reference letter, ask early—when possible give your references several weeks notice and give them a deadline of two weeks prior to when you hope to get your application in (Caution: Do not give them the application deadline date as their due date for the reference letter. Some references may delay until the deadline and a family emergency, departmental problem, time management issues, etc. may cause them to miss the deadline.)
- Set an appointment with your reference to discuss the issue of providing a reference for you. Bring supporting materials in your favor when talking with the individual. The meeting will allow you to gauge the reference's response to your request and your materials will provide discussion points for the person providing the reference, helping them use stronger language/examples in a phone reference, and write a stronger recommendation letter if applicable.
- Prompt the reference every Thursday to give them the status of your search/application process—this will remind them of their commitment to serve as a reference, or write a reference letter for you if applicable.
- Thank your references for providing phone references and/or letters of recommendations—send them a thank you note or letter.
- Make sure to get at least one reference from your job/internship search target field of work.
- Ask for one more letter of reference than what the application requires, when applicable.
- Ask references to customize their recommendations to each job/internship you are applying.

SCANNABLE RESUMES

What are Scannable Resumes?

At many large companies, human resource departments have computers equipped with OCR (optical character recognition) systems. Resumes are scanned into this software program, which reads them, stores information in text files and rates the candidate's qualifications for a position based on predetermined job criteria.

What to Keep in Mind When Writing a Scannable Resume

Employers will generally indicate when they would like a candidate to submit a scannable resume. You have to understand what the company is looking for and communicate that information so that the computer will select your resume to be read by a human being. Searches are usually conducted using keywords and phrases that describe the skills and education required for the position, thus, use terms and familiar industry acronyms that describe your skills and experience. Below are some tips to get you started.

Scannable Resume Tips

- Use white or light colored 8 ½ x 11 paper, printed on one side only.
- Don't use dot matrix or poor quality copies; provide the employer with an original laser printed version.
- Send the resume in a large envelope; do not fold your resume.
- Use standard typefaces such as Arial, Futura, Helvetica, New Century Schoolbook, and Times New Roman; avoid decorative fonts.
- Use a font size of 10 to 14 points (avoid Times New Roman 10 point).
- You can boldface and capitalize all section headings, but make sure that the letters don't touch one another.
- Never use italics, underline, shadows, bullets, slashes, dashes or contractions.
- Don't use lines, graphics, boxes, or shading.
- Use a very traditional format for your resume; don't use a two-column format.
- Your name should be placed on the first line of the resume; avoid starting your resume with "Resume of" or with your address on the top line.
- Use a standard address format below your name (name on top line; street address and box/apartment number on one line; city, state and zip on one line; phone number on one line; email address on one line).
- Left justify text.
- If your resume exceeds one page, place your name at the top of each additional page.

Tips for Getting Resume Selected

- Use lots of key words to define your skills, experiences, education and professional affiliations.
- Be specific about your abilities.
- Use action words to express achievements.
- Increase your list of key words by including specifics (e.g. list the names of software programs you use such as Microsoft Word, Excel, Access or Powerpoint, HTML, Dreamweaver)
- Use common headings (e.g. Objective, Experience, Employment, Work History, Positions Held, Skills Summary, Summary of Qualifications, Accomplishments, etc.)
- You might consider including a "Summary of Accomplishments" section after your objective. This will allow you to focus on results you achieved in the field rather than specific duties or responsibilities

WRITING YOUR OBJECTIVE STATEMENT

Objective statements should be composed with the audience in mind. Your objective statement is not written for you! Instead of listing what you want, highlight the skills, knowledge, and experience that you have to offer. Answering the questions below and following the suggested form will help you to write a strong audience centered objective statement.

1. What position or occupational field do you wish to be employed in? _____
2. Specific area(s) of interest: _____
3. Skills / experience / knowledge you can offer: _____

Writing the Objective Statement...

1 _____ + 2 _____ using (utilizing) 3 _____, 3 _____ and 3 _____.

Position/field + area of interest using list of skills (no more than four)

Career Objective Examples:

Assistant buyer position utilizing ability to manage multiple responsibilities, excellent communication skills, and strong desire to complete assigned tasks.

Obtain internship experience in Occupational Therapy working with geriatric clients using knowledge of treatment procedure, diagnostic skills and willingness to work as member of a team.

Accounting position where strong organizational skills, attention to detail and producing timely results are rewarded.

Staff social work position in a community hospital counseling addiction patients using previous health care and clinical experience.

Obtain field experience in art therapy application and practice in a internship or coop type experience. Offer strong communication skills, experience with multi-cultural expression, and various forms of therapy.

Avoid these mistakes in writing your objective statement

Leave out the following phrases:

- opportunity for advancement
- position that requires creativity
- a challenging position
- dealing with people
- a progressive company
- a company that is recognized
- a chance to advance
- a chance to grow

COVER LETTER CONTENT AND LAYOUT

Your Contact Information

Month Day, Year

Contact Person

Title

Organization Name

Street Address

City, State Zip

Consider using the same header as your resume, to establish a branding for yourself.

Dear Mr. or Ms. Contact's Last Name

If no contact name, write Dear Human Resources Specialist or Hiring Manager. Avoid using To Whom It May Concern

First Paragraph: Why you are writing

In your initial paragraph, state the reason for your letter.

Letter of application: If you are applying for a specific opening. State the position and indicate how you learned of it. If you found it from someone currently working there, be sure to mention their name (with their permission of course).

Letter of Inquiry: If you are inquiring as to whether there are openings with the organization in your field of interest.

Second paragraph: What you have to offer

1. Indicate why you are interested in the position or organization. – Do your research! Employers want to know you are interested in working for them, not just anyone. Show them that you know who they are and what they do.

2. Indicate what you can do for the employer. – This is known as an employer-focused letter. If all your paragraphs begin with “I...”, then you have written a self-focused letter. Change your wording! If you are a recent graduate, explain how your academic background makes you a qualified candidate for the specific position. If you have practical work experience, point out your specific achievements or unique qualifications. Show the employer how the knowledge or skills you have will allow you to fulfill the position and be a benefit for the employer. You may refer to your enclosed resume, but try not to repeat the same information that the reader will find there. This is your chance to expand that information and really shine.

Third paragraph: What happens next?

In the closing paragraph, indicate your desire for a personal interview. Close with a statement that will encourage a response. For example, state that you will be in the city where the organization is located on a certain date and would like an interview. Or, simply state that you will call during a certain week to inquire about an interview. Ask the employer to contact you if they desire additional information.

Sincerely,

Add your handwritten signature here, using black or dark blue ink if you submit the letter as a hard copy.

(Leave 3 black lines spaces for your signature when typing)

Ms. Jane Johnson
Director
The Washington Post
1111 Wells Avenue
Washington, DC 11111

Dear Ms. Johnson,

I am writing to express my interest in the journalism internship that was advertised at www.internships.com. Having a strong journalism background and with plans to live in the D.C. area this summer, I am very interested on learning more about the opportunity at The Washington Post.

Through college coursework and work experience in the U.S. and Germany, I have gained over three years of journalism and writing experience. My positions with The Boston Globe and German based Thüringen Allemeine involved extensive editing, research in the community, connecting with over 40 local organizations, and often meeting very short daily deadlines. In my current work with Mount Mary College's student managed newspaper, I coordinate layout and design for 4-6 pages and conduct feature writing and reporting. My most recent features have included a full-page story on the College's three-all conference softball honorees, and a two-article series sharing hoe the history of social justice at the College has connected with the development of several programs in the local community. The quality and variety of my experiences have prepared me for future journalism opportunities such as the internship with your organization.

Enclosed you will find my resume for your to review with further qualifications. I would be happy to provide writing samples upon request. To follow up with you, I will call the week of October 11, 2011 and confirm you have received my resume and make arrangements to hopefully meet with you while I am in Washington D.D. in November.

Thank you for your time and consideration. I look forward to talking with you soon.

Sincerely,

Jordan Smith

Enclosure

Do not copy this letter word-for-word. This is a sample only.
Use your own wording when writing letters to contacts and employers to demonstrate communication skills.

- Use 1 to 2 paragraphs to highlight your most impressive qualifications (start with the most relevant or prestigious).
- Reword or rephrase the information in your letter so it does not exactly repeat the words/phrase on your resume.
- Try to share additional relevant details to enhance information shared on your resume.
- Avoid beginning more than one paragraph with the word "I."

Ms. Jane Johnson
Director
The Washington Post
1111 Wells Avenue
Washington, DC 11111

Dear Ms. Johnson,

Thank you for taking time to talk with me yesterday about journalism internship opportunities at The Washington Post. Meeting the newsroom crew was a true highlight during my visit. It was clear that they are a professional, enthusiastic group of people who enjoy working together as a team.

Talking with you about internships at the Post was also greatly beneficial. I was especially excited about internship opportunities in the international news area that you described. My background in working with international news media organizations and interest in global issues match well with the position's requirements. I would enjoy being a part of that type of department.

I understand that you will be connecting with me sometime within the next two weeks. If I can provide any additional information in the meantime, please do not hesitate to contact me at (608) 555-5555 I look forward to the possibility of working with you.

Sincerely,

Jordan Smith

- Send either a thank you letter or a handwritten note the day after your interview.
- If you know the candidate selection will happen quickly a thank you email may be more appropriate. This will ensure that the employer receives your thank you prior to their decision making.
